Following a grant from the Ministry of Culture and Communication (see our acknowledgements page), it is now the City of Paris' turn to put ArkéoTopia under the spotlight.

At the traditional New Year's greetings reception at the Maison des Associations (premises used by associations) in Paris' 7th district on Thursday 13th January 2011, in the presence of Ms Florence Gerbal-Mieze (official representative for local democracy and associations in the 7th district) and several elected representatives, ArkéoTopia was invited to speak by Mr Hamou Bouakkaz, deputy mayor of Paris, himself responsible for local democracy and associations throughout Paris. This is how Ms Chris Esnault, Treasurer and Communication Officer came to present ArkéoTopia to an assembly of around a hundred people, including Ms Rachida Dati, Mayor of the 7th district, and Member of the European Parliament and a film crew from television channel FR3.

Although our president, Dr Gransard Desmond, was absent, detained at a seminar, Ms Chris Esnault stood in for him brilliantly, and added her personal touch of humour and sparkle which delighted the participants. She was also able to relay important messages about the importance of career advice for young people, whether they be in secondary school or university students, and to present the association's objectives clearly and simply:

To promote, support and defend archeological research and all that relates to it in France and elsewhere.

This moment of conviviality was also an opportunity to mention the SIMPA tool developed by the city of Paris to allow associations to communicate and facilitate a number of administrative exchanges, notably the submission of funding requests. After a lively opening about the difficulty of putting the tool in place which made the assembly laugh, Ms Chris Esnault did not forget to highlight the utility of this tool, which has the great advantage not only of autonomous updating by the association, but also of being a point of contact not limited to the city of Paris' website, but extending to all the city's districts, giving ArkéoTopia visibility beyond the 7th district, since its work involves not only the local area. Even if there are still some details to be refined, this tool will prove to be very useful for associations, notably for following administrative exchanges. After this, and before sharing a galette (a traditional frangipan pie eaten in January), Ms Esnault answered questions from the local online TV station, Saint-Germain TV.
