

Following on from songs, ArkeoTopia® is entering the world of games with the role-playing game project The Heritage Crusaders coordinated by Jean-Olivier Gransard-Desmond.

A table-top role-playing game is a fun tool to present archaeology and careers within it
(© Diacritica, 27 November 2010)

Since three years, ArkeoTopia® is getting into gamification with the role-playing game (RPG)[1] The Heritage Crusaders. After My Archeology Book for the youngest, the role-playing game The Heritage Crusaders aims to popularising archaeological research for high school student and more.

Objectives? These are plural because, other than having a good time and discovering archaeology in a fun way as a family or in an activity centre, envisaged uses also include other forms of learning. The primary beneficiary will be teaching at a primary, secondary and even university level.

Exit Indiana Jones and the demise of archaeology; ArkeoTopia's team has everything covered. Fans of explosives and other forms of destruction which are detrimental to heritage will not be forgotten. On the contrary, a surprise awaits to catch them out. A cross between a hard-copy educational game and the pleasure of an adventure that lasts an evening, The Heritage Crusaders will surprise you and let you unwind while giving you an initiation to archaeology and the professions surrounding it. A game to follow...

If you would like to take part in the project or find out more, write to us at jdr@arkeotopia.org

To find out more about ArkeoTopia, consult the presentation of our association and write to us at contact@arkeotopia.org

1. A table-top role-playing game allows players to put themselves in the place of imaginary

ArkeoTopia enters the world of games

Published: Tuesday, 14 February 2017 08:35

Hits: 1834

characters and live out adventures in a universe invented and scripted by a Game Master. Everything happens orally, as if several people were telling a story. The role-playing game The Heritage Crusaders enables a group of friends, a family, or activity leaders and young people to gather around a table for an afternoon or evening and discover archaeology while having fun (to find out more, see the article "Role-playing game" and the detailed article "Table-top role-playing game" on Wikipedia).